- Provides structured activities throughout the day
- Emphasizes functional communication skill-building
- Offers a higher ratio of staffing than typical daycare centers
- Provides access to consultation services for children who are behaviorally challenged

Little Butterflies, a new inclusive daycare program in Haddon Heights, N.J., was established in response to needs expressed by families of children with autism and other developmental disabilities.

While most day care centers are not set up to accommodate or serve children with autism spectrum disorders or other developmental disabilities, this program has been designed to serve all children.

Families can now enroll all their children in one center confidently, knowing that Bancroft's specially trained staff members will provide structured activities designed to help each child learn and grow. These include art, music and periodic community outings.

Little Butterflies gives children the opportunity to establish social skills and friendships in a comfortable and supportive environment. In addition, a range of professionals are available on-site for consultations, including behavioral therapists and special-education professionals.

Bancroft has a long history of offering a wide range of state-of-the-art services to children and adults with autism, intellectual and developmental disabilities and other neurological challenges. As a leader in the field, Bancroft has a strong track record of success in helping people live the most fulfilling lives possible.
